Paksi, Awang Pradana. “The Language Attitudes of Javanese Teenagers in English Department of Airlangga University towards Javanese Language”. A thesis submitted as partial fulfillment of the requirements of the Sarjana degree of the English Department Faculty of Humanities, Airlangga University, Surabaya. 2013.

ABSTRACT

This study deals with result of study of language attitude of Javanese teenagers in Airlangga University. This research aimed to find out the important information about language attitude of Javanese teenagers toward Javanese language and its speech level and what is more preferred spoken by Javanese teenagers. It is use language attitude to know the attitudes of Javanese teenagers in English Department of Airlangga University and also to know are they still indicates to use, understand, and preserve the Javanese language. The participants of this study are student of English Department student of Airlangga University from batch 2009 to 20011, and the most important is the participant are required as Javanese teenagers. The procedures of data collection are observation the participants by distributing a questionnaire to the respondents, and interviewing some respondents random. The analysis will use the result of question, so we can know the result of this study. The findings are actually they are interested in using Javanese language, but the problem is they do not know how and when to use it. However, they still show that they care and want to preserve Javanese language. Based on this indicator, they have show positive attitudes towards Javanese language.

Key words: language attitude, Javanese language, Javanese teenagers

xi