

SYNOPSIS

In the year 2154, the earth is over polluted, overpopulated, and disease almost plague every people in Earth. The wealthiest people have fled the planet and taken refuge on Elysium, a high-tech space station to live, just beyond earth's atmosphere. While those on Earth are policed by ruthless robots, Elysium's citizens are governed by President Patel and secretary Delacourt. Elysium residents has access to private medical machines, that could make instant cures for any disease or illness.

A poor little boy named Max Da Costa and his friend, Frey Santiago, are living in the ruins of Los Angeles. They live in an orphanage with a kindly nun. The nun says that Max is born to do something great. Frey and Max are looking up at Elysium, which is visible from earth. Max intends to go there someday and promises to take Frey with him. Years later, when he's 36 years old, Max is preparing to board a bus to travel to his job. Two security robots approach him as he's standing in line. They rip off his backpack, then hit him twice, breaking his wrist. He's a felon, a former car thief, and on parole, so he's frequently singled out for harassment. Matt and Frey accidentally meet at the clinic where he goes to have his a arm treated, Frey work as nurse now. Matt asks her to have coffee with him, but she declines. Finally, she agrees to meet him soon.

Max works at an assembly line for Armadyne Factory, a company which produce robot for Elysium residents, and also the robots for police in Earth. The shift supervisor docks him half a day's pay for being late. Some of the poor people in Los Angeles were able to come up with some money which they use to acquire Elysium identification code on their wrists, then they could use medical device in Elysium. Of course they immigrate to Elysium illegally. Delacourt is the Defense Secretary for Elysium. When she's told about three unauthorized shuttles approaching, she overrides Executive Order 355 and activates a rogue sleeper agent named Kruger. Kruger immediately grabs a shoulder-fired ground to air missile launcher and fires off four rockets. The rockets chase down the shuttles and destroy two of them, killing all 46 people on board. The other shuttle makes it to Elysium and lands, but the police robots arrest them eventually and send them back to Earth.

When Max work in Armadyne, a pallet jams open the door to the firing unit for the robots. The supervisor orders Matt to un-jam the door or he will lose his job. Matt has no choice but to squeeze into the chamber and push the pallet away from the door. When he does that, the door suddenly shut and the radiation powers on. Matt receives a lethal dose of radiation and send him to catastrophic organ malfunction . He is told that he will die in five days. Armadyne CEO John Carlyle goes down on the production floor to see what the emergency was. He sees Matt lying on a bed in the infirmary and orders that Matt be taken away so he won't mess up the bedding. A robot gives Matt some pills to help him deal with the inevitable discomfort.

President Patel summons Delacourt. She is brought before the President and his cabinet. They are not happy with her for ordering the shuttles shot down, and for using Kruger to do it. Delacourt is impudent, as she sasses Patel and all but calls him a coward who would see Elysium destroyed if not for people like her. Patel threatens to fire Delacourt if she screws up again. He orders her to stop using Kruger. When Kruger know that he's not going to be use anymore, he's angry and feels betrayed.

In his dying condition, Max meet Spider, the rebel behind the illegal transports to Elysium, Max ask Spider to provide him a ticket to go to Elysium. Max want to go to Elysium in order to cure his radiation. Frey has a young daughter, Matilda who experiences acute leukemia and also need to cure by medical device in Elysium. Finally Spider decides to make Max an offer. If he'll plug into the brain of one of Elysium's high-ranking officials and obtain pass codes and other secret data that would provide Spider access to money, then he'd make sure Max was able to get to Elysium. Max must submit to surgery by what appear to be nothing more than glorified tattoo artists. They surgically attach a third generation powered exoskeleton to Max's body and insert a data collection device in his brain. The exoskeleton gives Max the strength of a droid. Max tells Spider that his friend, Julio, had to be included in the deal, and that John Carlyle must be the high level target.

Delacourt, vowing to protect Elysium and her own power, bargains with Carlyle to create a program that can override Elysium's computer core to give her the Presidency. Carlyle would be beneficiary of a 200 year contract to provide essential services to the community of Elysium. Carlyle works up a new computer protocol called "Sabre Cerebral Defense," and programs it into his own brain device. He also encrypts it with a denial system that would prove lethal to anyone attempting to download and use the program. He then boards a shuttle for a flight to Elysium. Max and team of Spider's men arm themselves and make use of two fast armored vehicles. They are aware of Carlyle's planned flight to Elysium and they set out to intercept him. Once the shuttle has cleared its launch facility and has traveled a short distance, the explosive is detonated and the shuttle is forced to crash land. Delacourt calls Kruger as soon as she's informed that Carlyle's shuttle has gone down, and that a former felon named Max De Costa was responsible. Kruger demands that he be "re-instated" if he decides to go rescue Carlyle. Delacourt says ok, then arranges for two of Kruger's former associates to go pick him up. Max and his men arrive at Carlyle's shuttle and are confronted by one of two droids who were on the shuttle with Carlyle. Max and his men quickly establish a head to head computer connection between Max and Carlyle, but something is wrong and Max's computer expert says he can't read the data being transferred. They are out of time, as Kruger and his team have arrived.

Delacourt ordered that Max must be captured but that his brain be left undamaged. Carlyle dies and Max is able to escape. Max is saved by Frey and he meets Matilda. Frey tells Max that Matilda has leukemia. She asks Max to find a way to get Matilda to Elysium, so she can be cured. Max tells her it's too dangerous, and he can't do it. Max goes to see Spider and demands he fly him to Elysium immediately. Spider tells Max that there's a no-fly order in effect and it can't be done. Spider then connects to the port in Max's head to see what data had transferred from Carlyle's head. He quickly realizes it's a reboot program for Elysium, something of tremendous significance. Max realizes he can trade the data for his cure and decides to leave. Spider has to quickly order his men not to shoot Max. Max is desperate to get to Elysium so he can heal himself of his radiation poisoning.

The battle begins when Max flies to Elysium with Kruger. He wants to trade the data in his head for a cure from the medical device. Kruger makes it clear that he intends to use the data deposited in Max's head to re-program Elysium and make himself the new president. Kruger then kills Delacourt. Max calls Spider and they make their immediate plans. Max then heads for the armory and takes the last of his pain pills.

Kruger is now outfitted in a military-grade exoskeleton far superior to Max's droid suit, then orders his goon to kill Frey and Matilda. Max sends Frey to the surface with Matilda, telling Frey to get Matilda to a Med Bay, promising her that it will work this time. Max teams up with Spider, reminding Spider that they have a deal only if Frey gets her daughter to a Med Bay. Spider sends one of his men to help Frey. Kruger blows up one of Spider's men. Kruger then goes after Max with his sword. In a desperate fight on a high catwalk, Spider tackles Kruger before he can stab Max and Kruger's sword goes flying several levels below. Kruger then jams a knife into Spider's hand, taking him out of the fight. Max and Kruger engage in hand-to-hand combat. Max is losing the fight, when he suddenly executes a body flip and disengages Kruger's exoskeleton power source on the way down. Kruger manages to clip Max to a railing and then pulls the pin on a grenade, intending to blow them both up. Max pulls himself loose and flips both Kruger and the grenade over the railing. Kruger explodes in mid-air.

Spider makes a cable connection to the port in Max's head at the same instant that Frey flips the switch on a Med Bay containing Matilda. Spider first confirms that Max wants him to proceed, as the data download process will be fatal to Max. Max confirms, but first he connects to Frey and tells her goodbye. Max then presses "Enter" on Spider's computer, just as President Patel arrives with security to arrest Spider. The Elysium reboot takes place and everyone on earth become citizens of Elysium. Max dies, Spider is released, Matilda is healed, and numerous Aid shuttles are sent to earth to help the new citizens. Now all of people become Elysium citizen that could obtain same right in medical treatment and economic aspect.