

SYNOPSIS

The basic storyline is that of how the Orcs went from being essentially peaceful people in harmony with their world to demonically tainted beings capable of genocide. The story of the Orcs starts with a noble race, living peacefully on Draenor. The Orcs have coexisted with the Draenei for hundreds of years, ever since the Draenei arrived on Draenor fleeing from their ancient enemies. While the Orcs take pleasure in hunting animals and bloodlust, they are not killers and have a culture, family groups, and a belief system. But all that changes when the Burning Legion turns a key orc to their side, and he leads the orcs on a terrifying descent into madness.

Orcs begins to leave their old traditions and starts to make armors, axes, swords, increasing training for battle intensity in order to attack Draenei. The elements which always help the shaman in casting spell and heal the wounded has no longer aid them. The ancestor no longer show up after they blame on Ner'zhul to what he just did to his people. The time when Ner'zhul fall come after Gul'dan replace him unrespectfully under command of Kil'jaeden.

The situation is getting worst when Ogre, the old enemy of Orc has become Orc's ally in banishing Draenei. And then under Gul'dan command and Kil'jaeden advisory, Orc is ordered to drink the Blood of Mannaroth, Mannaroth is demon. Then, Orc turns into an angry mobs, bloodthirst horde that wants the death until the last Draenei. They are not a hundred percent successful. Velen, the highest leader of Draenei plays his tricks. He ask some few Draenei to stay at their last city to slain. Velen wants Orc think that they already banish his people to the last. And he is succeeded.

Only one clan stands apart, the Frostwolves. Their leader Durotan watches helplessly as the orcs are corrupted by demon. When Kil'jaeden reach his goal in taking and using the Orc through Gul'dan, Durotan getting frustated and starts to strengthen and act as stricken toward his people in the Frostwolf clan in order to keep save from global demonic corruption among Orcs. Not as easy as boiling a water, sometimes Durotan must take an order, especially when the order is point on his people of Frostwolf. He will not refuse it while death and exile for entire clan are the consequences. This is what we call a loyal in the wrong time at the wrong place. Durotan does not alone; he has Orgrim as his best and trusted friend since he was child. However, Orgrim is in the second position in his clan. And finally, after Kil'jaeden abandon Orc in a miserable condition, a newcomer character named Medivh offers a solution which is building a portal. The portal leads the horde to the new land called Azeroth. From there, the story back to the narrator who is Durotan's son named Thrall. He is warchief and leads his people to the freedom. Freedom from human, elf, demons and for any other tyranny.