

SYNOPSIS

The two schoolboys, Ralph and Piggy meet by a lagoon. They are on the island because of their plane has attacked and crashed in the forest. While wandering near the beach Piggy discovers a conch shell and suggests Ralph to blow to summon the meeting. Ralph blows the conch, and gradually, a number of boys accumulate on the beach. Jack and his choir also come.

The boys discuss their situation and determine that since no adults are present, they hold the votation. Then, Ralph is elected to be a chief of the boys, while Jack, the head of the choir who really wants to be a chief is chosen as the head of the hunters. Then, Ralph, Jack and Simon, set out to check the island if it is inhabited.

Furthermore, Ralph calls another meeting, and reports that they are an uninhabited island and without the presence of the adults. Then, Ralph makes the rule, and announces that only those who are holding the conch will be permitted to speak at meeting, and won't be interrupted except by him. He also proposes that they have to have a fire on the mountain so that rescuer will see it. Jack agrees with Ralph about the rule. He says they have to obey it, after all, they are not savage. He also says that he and his hunter will be responsible to keep the fire.

The conflict between Ralph and Jack appears, when Ralph complains to Jack about the inability of the boys to help some important jobs. He also accuses Jack and his hunter do not help to build the shelters. Jack insists that hunting is necessary, but Ralph says that shelter is more important.

One day, Ralph and Piggy notice a ship on the horizon, but Jack and his hunter who are responsible to keep the fire, go hunting and leave their duty. The hunters return led by Jack and celebrated their first success to kill a pig.

Ralph , then, calls an official assembly as a matter of urgency. He reminds the boys that they have stopped collecting water, that interest in building shelters dropped off after the first one was put up, and the standard of sanitation have been neglected. He also explains once again how important the signal fire is for their eventual rescue. Then, he suggests to find out what the caused of their fear. Afterwards, Jack brakes the rule. He interrupts Piggy's speaking . He also asks the capability of Ralph as a chief.

The other night, when the firewatchers are sleep, a dead parachutists flows down to the island. As they wake up, and see the dead parachutist, they are afraid because they think him as a beast. Then, they report to Ralph.

Eventually, Ralph and Jack and the other boys decide to hunt the beast. In the hunt, they meet a pig. They tries to kill it, but the animal escapes. Then, they hold the ritual killing, and Robert pretends to be a pig. Then, all the boys jab to Robert.

In the hunt, Jack challenges Ralph to climb the hill to see the beast. Yet, when they see the beast's face, they are afraid and then race down the hill to warn the others.

Furthermore, Jack blows the conch in order to summon the assembly. In the assembly, he accuses Ralph as a coward and unfit to be a chief. Then he calls for a vote to reject Ralph as a chief.

However, Jack fails. Then, he leaves the assembly, and announces that anyone who want to hunt with him can join him. Most of the boys follow Jack, and then, Jack proclaims himself as a chief of the new tribe.
