Development of dentomaxillofacial radiology in Indonesia

Eha Renwi Astuti

Department of Dentomaxillofacial Radiology, Faculty of Dentistry, Airlangga University, Surabaya, Indonesia

In Indonesia, dentomaxillofacial radiology science and technology has not developed as fast as other sciences in dentistry, and as fast as that in other countries. Limited availability of equipments and human resources in this field has made dental radiology look left behind. The objective of this paper is to provide information on the development of dentomaxillofacial radiology in Indonesia up to the moment. On September 5, 2002, the IKARGI (The Indonesian Association of Dentomaxillofacial Radiology) was formed as a functional body under PDGI (The Indonesian Dental Association). On February 2004, 18 IKARGI members were inaugurated as dentomaxillofacial radiology specialists with a duty to develop dentomaxillofacial radiology in Indonesia. On December 31, 2008, Indonesian Department of National Education has given its permission to establish Dentomaxillofacial Radiology Education Program, at the Faculty of Dentistry, Padjadjaran University, Bandung, and on February 27, 2010, 16 dentists specializing in dentomaxillofacial were inaugurated as consultant in dental radiology. It is expected that the whole infrastructures that will be formed are able to develop dentomaxillofacial radiology in Indonesia, particularly to produce professional human resource.
