In the current manuscript, the authors report an experimental rat model of acute myocardial infarction by ligating the left anterior descending coronary artery. This model could serve as an improvement with existing models. However, there are several points that will help improve the manuscript.

1. There is high mortality in the model reported in this paper. This should be substantiated. Further, the merits of this model compared to left anterior descending coronary artery ligation could be compared.
2. The authors should discuss the challenges/pitfalls associated with this model.
3. The authors do not demonstrate a specific pharmacological intervention that would validate the use of the developed model. This should be elaborated in the limitations if not performed.
4. The statistical analysis should be reconsidered. The authors describe p=0.000 that is not a typical standard of scientific reporting. I encourage the authors to consider reporting with "<" as an alternate.
5. It would be helpful to show or discuss any factors such as technical challenges that may influence the outcome.
6. The pictures shown are poor quality and the "area of interest/surgical field" is confounded with distracting images. I suggest reconsidering the key content of the images.

7. Animal welfare during the procedure should be discussed. More details on the anesthetic monitoring and the vital parameters should be discussed or reported.

8. Figure legends and methods should be described in detail to improve reproducibility.

9. The last figure in the manuscript is vague and needs to be professionally presented as a supplementary protocol.

Editor's note:

Manuscript must be checked and edited by native English speaker after corrected as per editorial and reviewer comments. We use American English so, check and correct accordingly.

Dear Customer Service Manager,

Author has not query but editor of Veterinary World is dissatisfied with the service of editing for that manuscript. If we have to check everything and inform you the mistakes then there is no meaning of editing. By over viewing the edited manuscript, you can see that editor has attended only some spelling editing only and nothing more.

You also, informed that we will get the Cc of all submissions (sent by authors) of Veterinary World to Editage but we are not receiving any Cc email as many editing were done by Editage for Veterinary World.

As per your previous email, you told that you will re-edit the manuscript (without any cost to the author) in which we dissatisfied with the level of editing. If you can not re-edit then inform us accordingly. Same problem was there in the article of Erma Safitri and you re-edited the manuscript without any cost to the author.
