Greetings, I will be traveling much of the summer through late August and only checking email on occasion, but nonetheless working on the July/August issue. If you are an author, please note that the review process is quite slow during the summer months, but I or one of my co-editors will be in contact with you by August and early September the latest. If your article is being considered for the July issue, this typically is released at the end of July, and I will be in contact with you prior to that time.

Dear Bagong Suyanto,

I hope this email finds you well. We have looked at your revised article and would like to accept it for our January 2018 issue! Unfortunately our August issue is already full, otherwise we would slate you for publication in August. As of this moment we have the following as your Author bio:

Bagong Suyanto

Departement of Sociology, Faculty of Social and Political Sciences, Airlangga University

If this is not what you want as your author biography, please include a brief author biography in your reply. Congratulations! You can now cite your article as forthcoming!

best,
Carley

Dear Carley,

Thank you for the great news! I am thrilled to hear that you are willing to publish my article on your journal. The author bio is correct and doesn't need revising.

I just want to make sure, did you mean that my article will be published on January 2019? Instead of January 2018? I think there was a mistake on the publication year.

Kind regards,

Bagong Suyanto

Dear Prof Suyanto,

Many of our articles require heavy editing and we work hard to help non-native English speakers publish their work. I think that's one area that makes the JIWS special. Thank you for being flexible with my content editing as well; it's an important piece outlining a problem that needs address. I'm glad to learn your univ has signed a contract with a language editing service. The issue should be online in 5-7 days.

My best,
Diana

Greetings,

Attached is your article for the forthcoming issue of the JIWS, Vol 20, Issue 2. As the editor of the journal, I had to edit your article extensively for English grammar, phrasing and repetition. The final version is attached. In addition, your conclusion was not particularly robust. It merely repeated the arguments you made throughout the paper, and your recommendations were rather thin. Your focus on sexual education of girls to preserve their honor and virginity is really not in line with liberatory views even though it might be culturally relevant. You should have made more recommendations for government, NGOs around sexual exploitation, sexual violence and ultimately, economic programs for well-being. Masculinity too needs to be addressed. I edited the conclusion heavily and added some language; however, I encourage you to read more widely about recommendations that come from other countries about this problem and to avoid blaming girls who are the victims, rather than their parents, the government and toxic masculinity.

Best regards,

Diana Fox
