COMMENTS

Please insert your detailed comments here.

The sample size for this study is quite small. Is there any justification why the author choose cluster random sampling instead of simple random sampling? The author stated that the sample size was calculated using formula for hypothesis testing between two population. Was it for comparing two means or two propotion? I guess it was using formula for two population means. However, the calculated sample size, 6 is too small. Can you please provide the parameter details (and their values) used for the sample size calculation.

Results:

For Oxytocin level, the normality test showed that the data was normally distributed except for control group.

Therefore, ANOVA can be use for the analysis of comparing the mean between groups instead of Kruskal Wallis test.

Please put the headings for table 2. e.g; playing angklung, n(%). For table 3, the heading is Mean but in the table is the value for mean and standard deviation,so the headings should be Mean(SD). Results from post-hoc analysis(with correction, e.g; Bonferroni correction) can be put as footnote under the table.

The author may refer to (http://journal.usm.my/journal/01MJMS23052016_ED2.pdf) as guideline.The results table should be revised and presented accordingly.

Comments to the Author

The authors did not enclose separate accounts of how this revised manuscript differed from the previous one, and how the comments of the reviewers are answered

I appreciate that the authors have stated the limitations of the study clearer and made suggestions for improvement in the future

From what I can see, this is indeed an improved manuscript with corrections made to some of my comments.

However, there are still no local studies quoted on the psychological tests used, thus making the validity (especially the sensitivity) less convincing

I am still not certain why such a small number (6 to 9) of subjects in each group was enough for statistical differences, though the formula provided did suggest so. I would like to have the comments by a statistician

With such, I strongly recommend that the title of this research should include the words "A preliminary study".

Comments to the Author

Your sample size is too small because of the detectable mean difference is much bigger than the standard deviation, which lead to the effect size > 1 . Please discuss this as your limitation on why you have to use small number of samples for the study.

In Table 2, no need to put % in each frequency, eg: 12(60.0%) when there's already in the headings- n(%).

Please refer to (http://journal.usm.my/journal/01MJMS23052016_ED2.pdf) as guideline of results presentation in the table.

Other corrections - satisfied.
