Dear Trias,

Congratulations on this fresh new (and very timely!) publication! This is a such an important achievement, especially for these children living in slum districts. Additionally, this publication is also going to be very helpful in our funding application, notably to demonstrate your research experience in successfully achieving dietary behaviour change via an elementary school-based intervention that include both children and their mothers. Very well done, and many thanks for sharing this with us!

By the way, I've attended an Evolve roundtable today where Christa Räder (World Food Programme) presented a school-based project in Indonesia to increase the consumption of fruits and vegetables in children and their parents, also making use of "My Plate". I have taken screen captures of her slides and have compiled them in the PPT attached FYI. Have you ever heard of this project? Are you in any way involved with it?

In other news, I am still working on the project summary for Indonesia. This Friday, I will send out to all our partners a more detailed research plan proposal (for the whole Unit), and after that I will focus on preparing one specific to Indonesia. If not on Friday, it will reach you early next week. Apologies for the delay..!

Best wishes, and congratulations again,
Monique
