Title of your paper: EDUCATION ROLE IN UNINTENDED PREGNANCY IN RURAL INDONESIA

Corresponding Author's Email Address: ratna-d-w@fkm.unair.ac.id

Author(s): Agung Dwi Laksono, Ratu Matahari, Arrum Firda Ayu Maqfiroch, Ratna Dwi Wulandari

Keywords: unintended pregnancy, education level, family planning, maternal health, media exposure.

Abstract: The impact of unintended pregnancy includes unsafe abortion, bleeding, and the risk of giving birth to a baby with a low birth weight. Several previous studies show that knowledge and education influence unintended pregnancy. The study aimed to analyze the relationship between education level and unintended pregnancies in rural Indonesia. The study examined 19,241 women who had given birth in the last five years in rural Indonesia. Apart from unintended pregnancy as an outcome variable, the study analyzed education level as an exposure variable. The study also employed eight control variables (age, marital status, employment, wealth, parity, and family planning (FP) on radio, TV, and in newspapers/magazines). The study employs binary logistic regression at the final stage. The results show the average unintended pregnancy in rural Indonesia is 11.3%. No education was 0.542 times less likely than higher education to experience unintended pregnancies (95% CI 0.542-0.543). Primary education is 1.599 times more likely than higher education to experience an unintended pregnancy (95% CI 1.599-1.599). Secondary education was 1.624 times more likely than higher education to experience unintended pregnancies (95% CI 1.623-1.624). Apart from the education level, the eight control variables tested also showed a significant relationship. The eight variables are age group, marital status, employment status, wealth status, parity, FP on radio, FP on TV, and FP in newspaper/magazine. The study concluded that education level relates to unintended pregnancy in rural Indonesia.
