COMMENTS for Authors:

In general, this manuscript presents interesting and valuable findings on peripheral nerve function in children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia: although 73% of subjects had no clinical symptoms of neuropathy, all demonstrated some degree of changes on nerve conduction studies. However, there are several issues with the expository and linguistic quality of the manuscript which need to be revised in order for the authors' message to be better understood, and some things need further clarification by the authors. I have written my detailed concerns as Comments in the .docx file attached.
