

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

The study of Respected Sir shows that the novel conveys a philosophy of life that is embodied in the main character's life course.

The conclusion of the analysis are :

1. The main character of this novel is a character that has a specific views about man, life, and God. This views is build from his consciousness as a muslim that man is created by God to undergo His path to fulfill the duties of life. It is developed and enriched by his life experience during the struggle to reach his dream. These views become the standard of his value about life, people, and God--philosophy of life.
2. From the beginning of his career pursuit till the end of his life, Othman Bayyumi, the main character, never fails his goal. He wants to be the Director General, that according to him is the representation of a perfect administration ruler. To achieve his goal, he prepares himself with some knowledge that are necessary for a government officer and works very hard until he almost neglects his personal and social life. His high value on governmental position nearly misleads him. He forgets that he is an ordinary muslim man. A man that needs a relation with a woman, not just a physical relation but an intimate relation on a legal islamic law. This kind of relation will make a muslim perform his duties before God with a clean conciousness. Finally, he realizes that what man can do is to struggle to reach the glory. The success or the realization of the struggle is beyond man's power.

3. Othman Bayyumi's philosophy of life shows a mixture of two major world views which belong to the mainstream of thoughts in Egypt; Islamic and Ancient Egyptian views. The views about the position in govermental office is the Ancient Egypt views while his views that become the standard of his attitude and action toward the position is derived from Islamic views.

BIBLIOGRAPHY