

Chapter IV

Conclusion

Actually, the characters have proved that they already have the things they wish for since the sensitivity of not having those things made them to dream if they have them. The urge of need inside them is an influencing factor for these characters that they make great efforts in getting what they desired at the first place. The incidents happened in the journey is the painful process for them to experience personality changes.

If we would like to observe closely about the way the process occurred in these characters adventure is through the hierarchy of needs formulated by Abraham Maslow. From the first level of fulfilling physiological need which was rather ignored for these characters are focused to obtain the next levels of the needs, until they reached the last level, that is self-actualisation, we are entertained by the interesting and intriguing incidents happened throughout the story.

Without putting aside the aspect of being enjoyable as children's book, this novel uses the characters as innocent and honest as they can be. The philosophy of life comes right under the surface at the moment. Every human being could not guess what comes next in their life just like what these characters had. The lessons they got from the experiences happening in the journey have transformed them into different people from what they used to be. Not only the fun and excitement are obtained when we follow the story, but the way the author encourage the readers to have optimism and positive hope in every situation is other supporting element which made the work the be one of a kind.

BIBLIOGRAPHY