

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

From the analysis, the writer comes to a conclusion that In facing her problem, Jane never gave up although she was rather depress with it. She had a brave enough courage to struggle against her sufferings.

During her childhood, whenever Jane got problem, she always faced it by using physical-strength and emotional anger, for example when John threw his book to Jane until she got injured, immediately she hit him back with her hand. Here, she used her physical-strength. When her aunt called Jane as a liar, By her emotional anger, she declared that she hate Mrs. Reed and told her that Mrs. Reed had forgotten with her promise to her husband for taking care of Jane. But after she met and being friend with Helen Burns who taught her about the patience in accepting the suffering, Jane became more rational in facing her problem. She used her mind, her patience and her perseverance than her physical-strength.

This experience were also used when she had problem with Mr. Rochester. Jane chose to keep silent and left him with hope that she would meet him again. Referring to the time, Jane could meet him again and lived happily with him.
