ABSTRACT

This study aims to examine the audit committee demographic characteristics of audit fees in non-financial companies. The demographic characteristics of the audit committee explain the proportion of women, the expertise of audit committee members in the financial sector, the expertise of audit committee members in the legal field, and the expertise of audit committee members in management. This study describes a quantitative approach to non-financial companies listed on the Indonesia Stock Exchange in the 2015-2018 period. This research method is purpose sampling with several predetermined criteria to produce 182 companies as research samples. Testing the hypothesis in this study using the t test, the coefficient of determination (R^2) and multiple linear regression tests through SPSS 20 data processing software. The results showed that the proportion of women, expertise of audit committee members in the financial sector, expertise of audit committee members in the legal field significantly influence audit fees while the expertise of the audit committee members in management does not significantly influence the audit fee.
