Title:

Society Participation on Relocation Policy of Street Vendor in Bulak Fish Center, Surabaya

Authors:

Erna Setijaningrum1 Fierda Nurany2

Institutions:

Faculty of Social and Political Sciences

Airlangga University

Content:

The aim of the research is to determine the society participation level in the formulation and implementation of relocation policy in Bulak fish center. This is based on the difficulty of street vendor to be relocated to Bulak Fish Center and due to they prefer to sell the fish on the roadside. The theory used in this research is the degree of participation theory by Arnstein (1969) which introduces participation ladder by categorizing the participation as citizen participation in decision making to policy implementation. According to the theory, it has three degrees of participation (non-participation, tokenism, and citizen power) which is specified into eight steps of participation (manipulation, therapy, information, consultation, placation, partnership, delegated power and citizen control). The results of the research indicates the level of society participation in the formulation of street vendor relocation policy is on non participation degree by manipulation step. Whereas, the participation level in the implementation of street vendor relocation policy is on the tokenism degree by consultation step, this indicates that it has the participation yet it is only justification to be approved.

Keywords:

Society participation, policy formulation, relocation policy implementation, Bulak fish center.
