=> Reviewer # 1

The manuscript entitled "Prevalence and diversity of gastrointestinal protozoan in Madurese cattle in Bangkalan Regency, Madura, Indonesia" describes a study involving fecal samples and identification of unicellular parasites of native cattle. The authors have examined some 500 fecal samples which are statistically significant number. There is some discrepancy in detailing the collection of fecal sample. For example, in line 67 of the manuscript, the authors wrote that the sample was collected from the ground after defecation. But while describing the fecal sample collection and analysis on line 86 quote "The samples were directly collected from rectum and brought to the laboratory" so there is not a consistency in the methods of sample collection. Which of these statement one should believe? Additionally, there are grammatical mistakes throughout the manuscript. i.e. in line 37, page 1, the authors wrote quote "Madurese cattle have great potentials to be developed because "you do not develop the cattle, you raise the cattle. These kinds of language issues are there in entire manuscript which needs to be addressed in the revised version of the paper.

=> Reviewer # 2

I reviewed the manuscript entitled: "\\\"Prevalence and diversity of gastrointestinal protozoa in Madurese cattle in the regency of Bangkalan, Madura, Indonesia\\\" with interest, my comments are as follows:

1. An important aspect is that the research meets the scope of the journal.
2. Based on the main objective of the paper, the innovation must be determined, it must also be considered if, in principle, the manuscript is publishable.
3. In the same way, the authors should verify if the summary and the introduction will unequivocally identify the need and importance of the research.
4. The Methodology, Results, Conclusions, Grammar and Spelling will be published (for example, there are several errors).

In conclusion: The paper must be rewritten as a Research Note and must be re-evaluated).

The study is interesting and provides valuable information; however, it still has errors in the references section, for example on "\\line 288\\".

The Authors must make a last revision of English style correction.

Dear Dr. Poedji,

We had asked you to do all the corrections in track changes in Word 2010 without compatibility mode but you have sent the file in Compatibility mode so, it may show spacing problems due to version change as there is no spacing problem in the original file.

So, please download the original file which was sent from us and save it in Word 2010 (without compatibility mode) and do all the corrections in track changes.

We can be able to produce PDF only after receipt of the corrected proof as per suggestions.
